We are researchers at the University of Toronto looking for people from the South Asian/Indian community to take part in a research study on health and social services for people after stroke. You could help us understand what supports people and their families need to get better after stroke. The research study is called ‘Breaking down the “one-size-fits-all” approach to poststroke services through an in-depth understanding of the poststroke experiences and needs of individuals from South Asian ethnic groups’. This project uses a technique called photovoice where participants will take photos to express their experiences after stroke.

Joining the study means that you would have:

- 3 individual meetings (~1-hour each) and
- 1 group meeting (2-hours)

These meetings would happen by phone or Zoom on the computer/phone. To thank you for your help, we will provide a $20 honorarium after each meeting. If you are interested in finding out more, please contact us:

Meera Premnazeer -Research Assistant
